Capital Markets for a Sustainable Recovery:
UKSIF launches online support for the debate

London, 3 March 2009 — UKSIF, the sustainable investment and finance association, has today launched its Sustainable Capital Markets Library to support the growing debate on how to build a robust operating framework for sustainable investment and finance. The launch comes in the run-up to the London Summit on the global economic crisis on 2 April.

This free library will assist policy makers, the finance industry and all who influence or study the changing nature of the capital markets by bringing together key documents on the impact of capital market structures and incentives on long-term responsible investment within the UK and worldwide. It has been developed with support from Aviva Investors.

UKSIF has also launched today online support for the growing number of industry roundtables and meetings about sustainable capital markets. Its Sustainable Recovery discussion log will enable easy access to the analyses and recommendations of sustainable finance practitioners.

Penny Shepherd MBE, UKSIF Chief Executive, said:
“As policy makers prepare for the London Summit, UKSIF’s online tools will support the debate on the reform of financial markets to deliver long-term wealth creation and innovation for a sustainable recovery. We must not only address today’s economic crisis but also avoid an even more damaging climate and resources crisis tomorrow.”
